WE THINK OF GOLF as an 18-hole game, but South Africa is unique today in the golfing world in having more 9-hole golf courses than we have 18-holers. This country has long held a heritage of 9-hole layouts, often basic and sometimes without a blade of grass, in every small town or rural 'dorp,' scattered around remote corners of our nation: from Gansbaai on the southernmost tip of Africa, to Musina on our northern border, from Kleinsee on the west coast, to Komatipoort on the border with Mozambique.

However, the state of our 9-hole courses is generally a mystery to the majority of city golfers. It's not in our golfing psyche to think of golf as a 9-hole game – we are always expected to play 18 – perhaps because these shorter courses are rarely found in bigger centres. On our long-haul drives from A to B we are seldom enticed to play those empty looking playgrounds we pass out in the “sticks,” however close they might be to a national road. But while they might not look busy to us, 9-hole golf clubs often serve an important task in uniting smaller communities. Their rudimentary clubhouses can be festive places, especially when the Sanlam Cancer Challenge comes to town.

Seven years on from our last look at 9-hole courses in South Africa (August 2006 issue) we have decided to revisit them.

Firstly, we have identified the 10 best 9-holers, courses of outstanding quality and beauty, and then added another 50 courses (+1) which we believe might be worth your while stopping to play when you next find yourself driving from A to B. Rather than rank them from one to 50, which would be an almost impossible task given their diverse qualities, we have put them into seven distinct groups. All the courses we have picked have a uniqueness about them which makes them stand out from the herd, whether it's taking tentative steps down the bush-lined fairways at Skukuza, inside the Kruger National Park, among a display of wild flowers at Springbok, playing alongside the Atlantic Ocean at Kleinsee, or high above the Tsitsikamma coastline at Fynbos.

Above all, our knowledge of 9-hole courses is nowhere near complete. We'd like to hear your views about the 9-holers you're familiar with. Have we overlooked a special gem that we ought to be informed about? Email and let us know the 9-holers that you particularly care for.

CULLINAN
012 734 1078

Main Road, Cullinan, 30 minutes drive east of Pretoria, Gauteng North; Green fee R155 (9) and R255 (18) on weekends; R60 for 18 on Mondays; Par 72
Attractive and challenging parkland course, with beautiful indigenous trees, that has had several private owners since being sold by the Premier Diamond Mine in the late 1990s. The old Premier GC was a private club, founded in 1905. The course was modernised in 1969 by Bob Grimsdell and Brian Wilkes. The fourth tee is on a bushveld kopje which provides an excellent view of the course.

GOWRIE FARM

layout (6 000 metres), five kilometres outside town, on the Sundays River, with views of the surrounding mountains. The club itself was founded in 1897, and its two previous courses both had sand and oil greens. A regular water supply enabled the club to grow kikuyu on the fairways, and plant Bayview on the greens. One of South Africa's most famous historic golfers, Douglas Proudfoot (1860-1930), lived in Graaff-Reinet, and the golf club hosts a 3-day Proudfoot festival in March.

KAMBAKU
Komatigolf.co.za; 083 258 4915

Komatipoort, Mpumalanga. Green fee R180 (9) and R220 (18); Par 72. Scenic and modern bushveld course, by DDV Design, and built by the members, bordering the confluence of the Crocodile and Komati Rivers at this border town with Mozambique. Lots of hippo and crocodiles to be seen in the rivers. The course, which opened in 2000, has cynodon grass from tee to green. It has excellent clubhouse facilities. An extra new hole has been built, making 10 separate holes in all. It's a short par-3 18th in front of the clubhouse.

KRANSPOORT
Kranspoort.co.za; 082 715 6029

On N11 between Middelburg and Groblersdal, near Loskop Dam, Mpumalanga; Closed Mondays; Green fee varies from R60 (9) to R100 (18). Par 70. Remote bushveld layout, on a river, designed by Peter Matkovich's associate Louis van der Walt, and opened in 2009. Has an estate/resort element.

021 430 6011. Mouille Point, Cape Town; Green fee R200 (9), R350 (18), Monday special R190 (18); Par 70. A modern course groomed and designed to the highest standards of the best 18-holers, this historic club, founded in 1895, occupies a unique position in

LUKE WALKER

Cape Town close to the Waterfront, overlooked by Signal Hill. The views of Table Mountain from the newly designed course were blocked by the building of the World Cup soccer stadium. It occupies a big chunk of the original course, which closed in 2007.

MOOינווי
014 574 4111

In the Magaliesberg, off the N4 between Hartbeespoort Dam and Rustenburg, North West Province. Green fee R100 (9) and R180 (18); Par 72. This is the only 9-hole course which hosts a regular Sunshine Tour event, the Platinum Classic (to be played in September), and the pros rave about its challenges and magnificent conditioning (bent grass greens). A good place to stop for 9 holes if you're driving through to Sun City. The club has a woman professional and golf director Nadine Johnston. Full membership is a steal at R1 100 a year. It used to be a mine course, but is now run by the members.

VULINTABA
Vulintaba.co.za; 087 310 4566

Vulintaba Country Estate is 20 kilometres from Newcastle in Northern KZN; Green fee R100 (9) or R160 (18). Par 72. Opened in 2009 as Dunblane estate, with the original layout by Peter Matkovich. Substantially changed last year by DDV Design for the new owners. This is a proper golfing challenge, with superb holes in a magnificent Drakensberg amphitheatre.

Kambaku is in the eastern Mpumalanga bushveld close to the Kruger National Park.

Terrific scenery is a feature of the Cathedral Peak Hotel course in the Drakensberg.

CATHEDRAL PEAK IS SCENIC HIDDEN GEM

THE CATHEDRAL PEAK Hotel celebrates its 75th anniversary later this year, but the management of this wonderfully remote hostelry in the heart of the Drakensberg has somehow neglected to tell the golfers of South Africa that it has one of the most charming and challenging of 9-hole courses. Admittedly the golf course was only opened for play in 1996, and it took several years for it to mature, yet Cathedral Peak is a course you could safely place at the head of any list of local “Hidden Gems.” I spent a Saturday afternoon playing there in May where I was the only golfer the course had seen that day. A few other casual hackers were to be seen on the Sunday. The clubhouse remained shut throughout the weekend. The valleys in which the golf course and hotel are situated are among the most beautiful in the Berg. You get as close to the big mountains as anywhere else without quite touching them. Their sheer dark walls tower over the terrain. And with snow on the peaks in early winter, the panoramic scene from every hole on the golf course is spectacular on a sunny day at this time of year. And there are many. You have to award it 10 out of 10 for aesthetics. Cathedral Peak itself is in the distance, 3 004 metres high. It was first climbed in 1917. Next to it is a giant column which looks like and is called The Bell. For the average guest admiring them from the hotel they look impossible to scale, but I was told that it’s just a day trip to the summit of Cathedral Peak and back, albeit a very strenuous one. You don’t have to be a mountaineer to reach the top, although you must have a good head for heights. There is a chain ladder to ascend and descend. No climber from the hotel has ever died on Cathedral Peak itself, but many have perished on nearby peaks and paths.

The story of the Cathedral Peak Hotel and this idyllic place is a fascinating one, and it’s on sale at reception, a thin publication by Brian Agar which I don’t think does the history of the area any justice. I read it in front of the fireplace while having a drink before dinner, one of those old-fashioned buffets of hot and cold food which must have taken an army of chefs to prepare. Four delicious courses later I emerged, needing a walk to ease my full stomach. I was glad I did. Venturing away from the rooms, I leaned my head back and was rewarded with the sight of a glorious night sky: Stars by the thousands lighting up the heavens. I stared at this incredible display for ages. It’s only in empty spaces like these that you realise what we miss in the cities.

The hotel was opened just before Christmas in 1938, the inspiration of a farmer’s son named Albert van der Riet. Uniquely, it has remained in the family ever since, and it retains that homely friendly feel to it. Albert’s son William became manager in the 1970s, and transformed it into the modern hotel guests experience today. Cathedral Peak Hotel is 45 kilometres from the nearest town of Winterton, so you can imagine what a challenge it was to build in those distant days, when there wasn’t even a road into the Berg. It quickly became a popular resort for South Africans, who visited for long holidays to enjoy the walks, climbing, horse riding, a variety of sporting activities, and the food! Christmas is when it is at its most festive. People still come for a full week (the hotel has special packages), because it is a glorious escape where you can unwind from the cares of the outside world.

Bowls was the sport that Albert van der Riet encouraged his guests to play. He built a couple of greens after World War Two, and the annual August tournament was one of the highlights of the national calendar, attracting teams from around the country. Golf only came into the equation after Albert’s death in 1987. A nephew, Hugh van der Riet, was a keen golfer, and he motivated the building of a course on a site below the hotel, which sits on a ridge, on the opposite bank of the Umhlambonja River. It took over two years to build, which provides some idea of the difficulties encountered. The course designers were brothers Roly and Reg Taylor, one of South Africa’s legendary amateurs, who was quite active in this field prior to his death in 1998.

I hadn’t known about their involvement prior to playing the course for the first time, but I soon deduced that this par 35 layout didn’t happen by accident. Clues were everywhere. Someone with golfing ability and imagination had weaved their magic on a site which traverses three different levels on a hillside. The Taylors used the land as naturally as possible. For a 9-hole course the design variety and risk-and-reward quotient is more diverse than you would expect. You can quickly lose golf balls here if you’re careless. The greens have subtle slopes, and Bayview grass gives them a slick pace.

But what makes Cathedral Peak such a fun experience are the elevation levels. The opening par 5 is flat and uninteresting, but after that you scramble up and down ridges of bushveld and really get into the course’s myriad challenges. There are several wonderful high tees, thrilling shots to play from them with a driver, 3-wood or hybrid, and it is healthy exercise. (Carts are available for those who don’t welcome the exertion.) I enjoyed the par-3 seventh, firing a 7-iron from the highest point of the course to a green far below, but the short par-4 eighth is perhaps the best of all. Again you play from an elevated tee (immediately above the clubhouse), to a narrow fairway flanked by a hillside and stream on the left. The green only comes into view when you reach your ball, tucked away into the hillside and guarded by a water hazard.

On a golden winter’s day, with all that beauty surrounding you, golf is really an exhilarating game to play.

Bosch Hoek has a magnificent parkland setting in the KZN Midlands. This is the par-3 fifth hole.

BOSCH HOEK SET FOR UPGRADE BY GOLF DATA

BOSCH HOEK GOLF CLUB in the KZN Midlands has been celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. For many years a private club, the playground of late industrialist Punch Barlow, it has long been recognised as South Africa's premier 9-hole golf course. However, that title was usurped from it by a neighbour a few years back when Gowrie Farm was established by Guy Smith a short distance away at Nottingham Road. Gowrie Farm has since become the first and only non-18-hole course to be rated good enough to take its place among South Africa's Top 100 Courses.

Both Bosch Hoek and Gowrie Farm owe their lofty status in the 9-hole golfing world of South Africa to the fact that they were established by men who could be described as "benevolent dictators" presiding over their own creations. They ruled their golf clubs with a singular purpose, without the confines of committees, and have made them great because of that firmness of principle. It brings to mind a Henry Longhurst story about the legendary J F Abercromby, creator of Addington Golf Club near London. When a new member strode into the clubhouse after a round one day, he asked the barman for the suggestion book. Abercromby was right there. "I'm the suggestion book," he said, prodding the newcomer with a bony finger.

Bosch Hoek now has a new owner in Ivan Clark, surprisingly a non-golfer himself, but a man with a passion for this beautiful property, which encompasses a magnificent private home, a 9-hole course, a lake for fishing, and without a doubt the most spacious golf estate component in the country. There are less than 50 homes, each a roomy distance away from the other, whose market value keeps soaring every year. Clark bought it from Peter Gallo, who married Barlow's daughter and the man who opened Bosch Hoek up to the public in the early '90s. Clark's son Andrew now lives in the main house with his family and runs a sophisticated equine hospital next door.

Clark sees no reason why Bosch Hoek should play second fiddle to Gowrie Farm, and on July 22 the course will be closed for more than four months, reopening in December. For the first time since the 9-holer was designed by the incomparable Bob Grimsdell in the 1960s, it is going to be given a major upgrade by Golf Data, who have a rather estimable record at transforming old courses. The greens will be the focus of attention, and bent grass will be planted. Bosch Hoek has several classic holes, none of which are straight or straightforward to play, yet the greens have always been adequate, rather than a prominent feature of the layout. Golf Data designer Sean Quinn can be assured of turning them into something special, as he did at Humewood for instance.

Bosch Hoek is very different from Gowrie Farm in character. Here you get a fine example of pristine English parkland, in contrast to Scottish moorland, even down to the great big home with its broad lawn bordering the second hole, a par 4 which is shorter than some modern par 3s. The course does give the appearance of being one big garden. And Bosch Hoek is also a pure 9-holer, as opposed to Gowrie Farm, which has extra greens and clever deviations in routing to make it that more interesting the second time around. There has been talk for years of Bosch Hoek becoming an 18-holer – there is extra land which could be used – but part of its charm is its compactness. The holes are close together, and there are short walks between green and tee.

The clubhouse is scaled similarly, an unpretentious building casually parked next to the first tee, although the interior has been luxuriously refurbished in recent times. There are few golf courses in the world where you can take just half-a-dozen strides from the bar counter to pegging up your ball. I know of a good few golfers who would love to be members for that reason.

Bosch Hoek is today a very social and strong club, attracting members from Maritzburg and Howick, whose own 9-hole course is so busy that tee times are difficult to obtain.

Gowrie Farm in the KZN Midlands has a rugged moorland feel to it.

GOWRIE NAMED ONE OF WORLD'S BEST "SHORT COURSES"

GOWRIE FARM, a course opened in 2007 at Nottingham Road in the KZN Midlands, and today comprising part of a golf estate, has been named one of the best "short courses" in the world, barring the United States, by Golf Digest magazine.

Gowrie, designed and developed by Maritzburg attorney Guy Smith, who previously conceived Prince's Grant on the North Coast, is at the very high end of 9-hole courses in terms of its design, construction and conditioning.

Clever use of alternate tees, at times spaced long distances apart, and three additional greens has effectively given it the look of an 18-hole course within the space of 9 holes. An excellent example of Smith's imaginative work is the seventh hole. It has one green. It plays both as a par 3 and a short par 4 from a tee much further back. The final hole plays as both a par 4 the first time around, and a par 5 the second time, utilising two different greens.

Another 9-holer which used similarly unusual design tactics was the old Metropolitan layout, at Mouille Point in Cape Town. That had 15 different greens. The new Met, utilising adjacent sports fields in compensation for that part of the old course it lost to the World Cup soccer stadium, has copied this splendidly with 13 greens. Designer Mark Muller created especially large greens to accommodate two flags on those holes which shared a green, increasing the enjoyability, variety and challenge of the layout. The final hole at the Met is a par 3, with two adjoining greens which call for two totally different tee shots.

50 9-HOLERS WITH SPECIAL MERIT + 1

10 IN MPUMALANGA

This province is blessed with a great variety of interesting 9-holers, either in the coal-mining area of the Highveld, not far from Gauteng, the northern bushveld, or the warm and humid Lowveld, which are wonderful courses to play in the winter months.

10 CLOSE TO THE N2

The N2 goes from Cape Town all the way along the coast to the Swaziland border at Pongola, and there are dozens of golf courses en route, many of them visible from the road. We've selected on our list the unusual Sedge Links (the reason for the +1 (above), which is more of a par 3 course than a proper 9-holer, but makes for a perfect golf and padkos stop. Kei Mouth, incidentally, has 13 holes, so after playing 9 you have some new holes to play on the back nine.

FYNBOS (E Cape), Eerste Rivier
HANKEY (E Cape), Baviaanskloof
KEI MOUTH (E Cape), east of East London
KLEINMOND (W Cape), near Arabella

STILBAAI (W Cape)
SWELLENDAAM (W Cape)
ZWARTENBOSCH (E Cape), Humansdorp

6 IN THE HEART OF KZN

Another province that has an abundance of 9-holers. KZN has 85 courses in all, and 50 of them are 9-holers, most of them in the interior or on the North Coast.

DARNALL, North Coast
GREYTOWN, Midlands
MAIDSTONE, North Coast
MTUNZINI, North Coast
UMFOLOZI, North Coast
UNDERBERG, Southern Berg

8 IN CITIES OR GOLF ESTATES

Most of our bigger centres do have one 9-hole course tucked away somewhere. Port Elizabeth actually has two, and many years ago had several of them.

AVION PARK, Kempton Park
BANKENVELD, Witbank
CAMELOT, Hillcrest, Durban
DURBAN DEEP, Roodepoort
GNUBIE, East London
HILLSIDE, Pretoria North
SANDY LANE, Hartbeespoort Dam
WALMER GC, Port Elizabeth

6 IN THE WESTERN CAPE

The province is flush with outstanding 9-holers, several of which were in contention for places in the top 10. Ceres is one of the best, and there were plans to increase it to 18 holes.

BREDASDORP, Cape Agulhas
CERES, near Worcester
MALMESBURY, Swartland
THEEWATERSKLOOF, near Villiersdorp
VREDENBURG, West Coast
WELLINGTON, Winelands

7 OFF THE BEATEN TRACK

If you're not a local, and you've played these courses, then you're obviously a 9-hole golfing nut.

AMANDELBULT, near Thabazimbi
CRADOCK, Eastern Cape
DOUGLAS, Northern Cape
KLEINSEE, West Coast
KOFFIEFONTEIN, Northern Cape
SPRINGBOK, Namaqualand
STUTTERHEIM, Eastern Cape
WHITES, Free State

4 BUSHVELD COURSES

We have many remote spots where golf is played in South Africa, but perhaps none more so than at Popallin Ranch, a superb DDV Design course on a private farm close to the Limpopo River, near the Pafuri Gate to the Kruger National Park. It has been fenced in to make it safe for golfers from the Big 5 on the property. The Legend Tribute course is 10 par 3s which are copies of great holes from around the globe, including Augusta National.

CITY GOLFERS WOULD WELCOME 9-HOLERS

ROGER Manning, owner of the popular Hillside 9-holer in Pretoria North, believes that more basic 9-hole courses such as his are essential in metropolitan areas to grow the game in South Africa.

"We do well because beginners love coming to play our course," says Manning, who was previously at the old Huddle Park with its municipal courses. "Most of them only play 9 holes, and they're in and out within a couple of hours. But the Gauteng metropole has very few 9-holers to cater for these new golfers. Sandonia is another 9-holer near us, but otherwise you've only got Durban Deep in Roodepoort and Avion Park near the airport. I'm glad to see Huddle Park have opened a mashie course as part of the upgrading of this facility."

Manning says that Hillside, which was built on a rubbish disposal site, has largely been immune to any drop in rounds that is being experienced in Gauteng. The club has about 2 000 members, who pay R750 a year as subs, but he admits that the membership keeps changing. "We are really a feeder club for the bigger 18-hole courses. Many of our members migrate when they lower their handicaps."

Manning encourages golfers to play 9 holes, rather than 18. "We don't have an 18-hole fee, and just charge them for nine. If they want to play another nine, and the course is clear, they can play for nothing. The problem with bigger clubs is that they don't encourage 9-hole rounds. All their fees are geared towards a golfer playing 18. But more golfers today only have time for nine."

Hillside was the first golf club to offer free rounds, on a Monday, and Manning says that the club boosted its turnover as a result. "The golfers spent their money with us in other ways, buying more balls and equipment, for instance."

Even now, Hillside is the cheapest course to play. The green fee for 9 holes on a Monday is R15, and the price goes up by R10 each day during the week, building up to R55 on a Friday. ■
